9 The file relating to the G.O is not available according to the directions contained therein, this Case has to be disposed of by the Nuzvid Branch, after consulting the Financial branch.

10 2. The objects of the present endowments are two, a charity and a temple. Of the fitness of the former to claim the ~~advantage~~ benefit of the G.O, there seems to be no doubt. As regards the latter, however, the question whether the performance of services in a temple is a suitable object of charity has been raised in a recent Case and its result may it seems be awaited.

11 3. There is another important circumstance in this Case which requires consideration. It is stated the temple is a government one if this is a fact, it is not known how the Case is considered to come within the purview of the notification of the 12th February, which applies only to the Charities, which the donors have "already established or contemplate establishing."

unless "establishing a charity is understood to mean "endowing" it. ~~charity~~. It is submitted that such a liberal understanding of the notification is soon likely to result in an embarassing situation to Govt. There are many thousands of small temples in the State and we may be swamped with small donations necessitating perhaps ere long a resort to clause V of the notfn.

WR 22/12.

12 The cases of endowments to charities already established do not seem to come under G.O. of 12-2-08, as it now stands. If however they shd be given the benefit of the said order, the latter has to be suitably amended.

13 By saying that the temple is a Govt institution, what is apparently meant is that it is in receipt of an endowment from Govt and there may be no objection to extend to a private endowment to such a temple the benefit of the G.O. of 12-2-08, if intended to be shown to temples also and the terms of the G.O. are so amplified as to cover cases of this kind.

14 It is not clear if it is not necessary or desirable to treat the cases of the temple & the chattram independently and if they are answered separately either or both may not satisfy the condition mentioned in rule 1 of the G.O. of 12-2-08, as the amount of deposit in favour of them may not be equal to the minimum limit laid down in that rule.

15 The chattram is undoubtedly a benevolent object. I believe also that if sevas are properly performed the people of the locality benefit from them in many ways & they must therefore be regarded as benevolent objects. Of course chattram & seva can both be managed in such a way that they cease to be benevolent but in this case the donor is willing to leave the management to Govt. after his life-time & Govt. can always so arrange the manage-as to retain the element of benevolence.

Such offers therefore, in my opinion, should be accepted with readiness. I do not fear being swamped with numerous donations in connection with our temples — I welcome such a state of affairs. So far as the donations would be new, we should have achieved something really good for the people viz. stimulating in them the feelings of religious fervour & charity. And as far as the conversion of donations already existing in other form, they would be very useful, as bringing the management of these temples into contact with and, at any rate partially, under the control of Govt — a contact & control exceedingly desirable and under a careful administration capable of producing important & far-reaching results.

Donations amounting to ten lakhs means less than Rs 5000 which will to Govt a year. GBy
